Cooperation activities

Why bilateral cooperation?

Statements given by Norwegian partners:

- The collaboration has been of mutual benefits (both scientifically/professionally and through broadening of our international network).
- Resources developed during the collaboration are also relevant for our institution in Norway.
- Useful to view well-known public health challenges in another national context where other solutions have been found. This has given ideas for use in a Norwegian national context.

Challenges experienced

Some success factors for a fruitful project partnership

- Focus on a specific scientific topic and define the challenge clearly
- Define how the foreign input is expected to give added value to the project
- Discuss mutual expectations for the collaboration
- Make sure that the goals and responsibilities are clearly defined to all parties
- Discuss the budget and timeline together
- Ensure that your institution can deploy sufficient staffing and resources to handle both the technical / professional cooperation, and the significant administrative work that you should expect
- Spend time together and build mutual trust
- Have fun – be enthusiastic!

100% recommend entering a partnership

Main obstacles
